Borrowing its title from an anthology of texts by Julio Cortázar, the exhibition Around the Day in Eighty Worlds revisits major works from the collection of the Capc Musée d'art contemporain de Bordeaux from the perspective of shifting systems of representation. Like most European institutions, the Capc built and developed its collection around a core group of male, European and more broadly Western artists, regardless of the fact that the city's history since the seventeenth century has been dominated by its commercial and cultural relationships with Africa, Asia and the Americas. Today, in an era where the cultural, social and political context determines the way spectators but also art historians look at art, it is essential to take a fresh look at public collections, as they are asked to pave the way for a multipolar world that makes room for artists who, for various reasons, were previously marginalised in the canon of western art history. The unprecedented movement of cultural decentring that the world has been witnessing for several decades now, but whose cultural, political and social repercussions are only starting to be felt, calls for a fundamental reassessment of public art collections if we want to account for the complex processes at work in globalisation.

The exhibition Around the Day in Eighty Worlds establishes a dialogue between artists of different nationalities, genders and generations, positing that new artistic narratives are possible and, indeed, desirable. While it is indebted to previous shows that have tackled these issues, including Modernités plurielles at the Centre Pompidou in 2015 and Intense Proximité at the Palais de Tokyo in 2012, it distinguishes itself by embracing a poetic approach, as suggested by its title.

To make this shift in perspective come alive, the Capc has secured a substantial deposit of works from the collection of the Centre national des arts plastiques (Cnap), with a focus on women artists and artists from non-European cultures – artists whose strong identity thwarts any simplistic attempt at reducing singular positions to their geographical contexts. This new corpus will be in dialogue with works from the 1980s and 1990s, two key decades in the history of the Capc's acquisition policy, during which the backbone of the museum's collection was formed.

Exhibition in collaboration with the Centre national des arts plastiques

The Centre national des arts plastiques (Cnap) is one of the main public bodies in charge of implementing the Ministry of Culture's contemporary visual arts policies. Acting on behalf of the State, it develops and manages the Fonds national d'art contemporain, a national collection that it preserves and promotes through short- and long-term loans to museums in France and abroad as well as through partnership exhibitions and publications. Comprising nearly 105,000 works acquired from artists in their lifetime, the collection reflects the entire spectrum of artistic movements and tendencies over the past two centuries. A key cultural player, the Cnap promotes diversity and supports artists and artworkers through various schemes. It also contributes to the promotion and dissemination of artistic projects and exhibitions by means of specific measures.

Capc/Cnap, Around the Day in Eighty Worlds

The Capc and the Centre national des arts plastiques have been collaborating ever since the Capc was granted museum status (1984). The Capc has regularly approached the Cnap for short- and long-term loans to enrich the display of its permanent collection. Of particular note is an exceptional ensemble of works by Chohreh Feyzdzjou (1955–1996) that comprises more than 400 items from the artist's studio. This monographic corpus was acquired by the Cnap in 2003 and loaned to the Capc the following year. It joins a selection of works by Daniel Buren, Claude Lévêque, Daniel Dezeuze, Annette Messager, Richard Serra, Anish Kapoor, Jenny Holzer and Mike Kelley, as well as more recent loans of works by Liz Magor, Alicja Kwade and Marianna Castillo Deball.

With over 100 works, the long-term loan granted by the Cnap in 2020 makes a critical contribution to the exhibition Around the Day in Eighty Worlds by helping to decentre the dominant perspective on art-making and art history. It is the result of a close collaboration between the teams of both institutions. The selection of works focuses on female and non-European artists, with recent acquisitions by Neda Razavipour, Younés Rahmoun, Sol Calero, Dominique Ghesquière, Fernanda Gomes and Vivian Suter featuring prominently. The exhibition furthermore showcases major historical pieces from the collection of the Cnap, such as the installations by Rebecca Horn and Chen Zhen.
